+ STYLE MAKERS

With the ever-increasing popularity of outdoor living areas, waterscapes have become a big part of landscape design. From infinity edge pools and tucked-away Jacuzzis to babbling creeks and waterfalls that mingle with the natural landscape, water features add new dimension to the outdoors. In this issue of LUXE, Jamison Ori, waterscape expert shares his knowledge of what makes water features a unique and unforgettable addition to any outdoor setting.

STYLE MAKERS

What is your current design obsession?

Mixing free-form and rectilinear-shaped pools with modern architecture.

What's your most recent prized creation?

I recently built a spa for a customer with a disabled family member. We designed hydrotherapy jets with different therapeutic water-flow patterns, as well as a broad variable temperature range and custom handrails for ease of access. These features bring enjoyment to the entire family and provide the benefits of in-home physical therapy.

What inspires you in your work?

The opportunity to meet and speak with a large variety of people daily, from prospective and current clients to trade people inside and outside my industry. I get to learn something new each day.

What challenges you in your work?

Moving from concept to construction to finished product. I make sure that any design our customers can imagine is properly engineered and built.

What defines your style?

I am a chameleon...I am not limited to appreciating one style. I tend to defer to my clients' personal styles on my projects.

Are you currently working on any special projects?

I have a project in St. Charles that warrants special mention. It is a free-form pool with a raised spa that features a waterfall. The pool has a zero-depth beach entry with custom mosaic tile and features a fully monolithic, domed grotto with cascading waterfalls at each opening.

Favorite design icon?

Frank Lloyd Wright. His work led to my fascination with extreme cantilever construction.

JAMISON ORI

ROSEBROOK POOLS

Jamison Ori recognizes water as an integral element in the home. With a deep-rooted appreciation for design instilled in him at a young age - Rosebrook Pools is a family owned business, he cultivated his own skills at the Libertyville firm starting at age 11 - Ori also recognizes the importance of evolution. Despite his long history in custom pool building, Ori participates in continuing education programs to enhance his capabilities in a water-shaping industry that's constantly changing. "The biggest trend I see right now is the creation of a total outdoor living environment—a continuation of both the interior and exterior aesthetic of the home," he says. Ori seeks to create spaces that meet his strict standards for structural integrity, aesthetic and function while exceeding his clients' expectations. He says, "Water features create an environment of tranquility. Water is one of the most multifunctional assets to any outdoor space."
